Carl Werner, an Imaginative Story 1838 in this book we go to five australian classrooms bustling with nine and ten year old children in each classroom imaginations are being done not just in minds but also with bodies using materials and words laughter and ideas each classroom is part of a different type of school a waldorf steiner school an exclusive private school a middle class government school a diverse catholic school and a school for intellectually disabled special children and at these five schools we see imagination being done to represent to transform to empathise to work with others and to think the book s characters are children and teachers with teachers working through the school day to give children the skills they will need to think with and about others and to be creative what we notice are habits of imagining being instilled these range from getting children to close their eyes and imagine accurate representations through to getting them to imagine how others feel to getting children to make new connections between thoughts and feelings we wonder about the implications of these habits for good knowing and good doing at the same time the book shines a critical lens onto the imaginative practices of ethnographers and participant observers to help us think about how we define how we class and how we analyse our data ethnographers too have habits of imagining representing empathising and connecting and noticing these habits can help us do them better how are academic practices both material and imaginative how might we make sure our work is both as accurate and as ethical as possible macknight argues that imagination is not just something hidden in minds it is something we do this then is a book about how to do imagination better for thinking for making and for living together
