Hidradenitis suppurativa is increasingly commonly diagnosed. It is most often seen in the axilla and infraumbilical areas of women. When it occurs above the waist, it is considered truncal hidradenitis suppurativa. This condition results in inflammatory nodules that are often painful and may discharge pus. The condition can be said to be incapacitating, leading to patients frequently missing important events and, in some cases, leading to patients having to stop work in mid-career. Management includes avoiding incriminated products, care by dermatologists, and biologics. There are increasing numbers of young adults being diagnosed, and numbers are growing. Physicians who have treated acne vulgaris in the past may be surprised when confronted with patients who have severe disease not responding to conventional therapy. Treatment includes antibiotics, often with side effects, and biologics.

one picture is worth a thousand words confucius the material on which this account is based derives from observations of several thousand of adolescents with acne all have been treated many hundreds have been biopsied and have participated in various tests these constitute our bona fides our plan and intentions are as follows firstly we have sought to create a portfolio of still life pictures of the gross and microscopic anatomy of acne this will be a photographic record of what acne looks like of its usual and unusual features its arch typical as well as of its recondite visages secondly we wish to create a moving picture of acne rather than an atlas we hope the reader will have the feeling of being in a theater watching an unusual drama since anatomy can only come to life when animated by physiology a vigorous attempt has been made to collate function with structure it is the eye that observes but it is the mind that sees finally this book is intended for those who wish to understand and treat acne more effectively the themes are programmed for the clinician this book will be chiefly a didactic account and not a detailed report of research we present ourselves as teachers not as investigators we conceive it to be the prime mission of medical research to learn how to identify prevent and treat the disease we shall present our personal therapeutic strategies the ones we use to treat acne patients
